PTSA Mardi Gras Auction March 11

Donations and Volunteers Needed

By Anne Atwell

It's time to gear up for the fourth annual PTSA Mardi Gras auction which will take place on Saturday, March 11 at Vashon High School (VHS). Each year this colorful event is a heartwarming tribute to the strength of our community in w o r k i n g together to make our schools the best they can be.

The money from the auction will again go to curriculum enhancement (new text books) at all three Vashon Island public schools. For the past three years more than $99,000 of auction proceeds have gone directly back into our schools: About $80,000 toward replacing 20-year-old math text books at McMurray as well as aging math books at the high school and elementary schools; and Continued on page 2

Old Age Is Too For Wimps

By Deirdre Petree

Woke up this morning, rain pounding on the skylight: "I'm retired, I don't have to go out in this any more and wait 45 minutes for a bus," I thought. Four bed kitties purred back, "We don't have to go out in it, either." "Can't fix the leaky skylight in rain this heavy — I'll go to the Senior Center, where a hot lunch and dessert for $3 ($5.75 for you under-60-years-old whippersnappers) and a warm welcome awaits me." How sweet it is on Vashon!

The Senior Center invites you to lunch on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday. The fun starts at 11:45 a.m.

Wolf Management Plan Proposed for Washington State

Response to Federal Plan to Remove Wolves from Endangered Species List

Washington State Senator Bob Morton is pushing for a gray wolf management plan in Washington State (SSB 6778). This is in response to the Federal government's announced intention to de-list gray wolves from the endangered species list. Gray wolves have been reintroduced into the Northern Rocky Mountains and as a protected species have done well in Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Oregon, and Washington. Conservationists fear that if wolves lose protection they will once more be hunted and destroyed by those who have opposed reintroduction of wolves.

Ferry Fare Meeting Tonight

There will be a meeting tonight, Wednesday, February 15 at Vashon Island High School, 6:30 to 8 p.m.,so the public can give feedback to representatives of the Washington State Transportation Commission on proposed ferry fare hikes.

Information page 7 on how to comment on ferry fare proposal if you miss this meeting.

Lindsay Hills Hills Solos with Seattle Philharmonic

Lindsay Hills, 17, will perform Ravel's Tzigane with the Seattle Philharmonic Orchestra March 5.

Auction2004 Total: $52,714 PTSA Programs $20,000 CES Math $20,000 VHS Math Books: $5,000 Music Programs $4,775 Art Programs: $2,939

Auction2005 Total: $65,325 PTSA Programs $15,000 CES Math $20,000 McM Math $2,500 VHS Math $5,000 Writing Curriculum $5,000 Music Programs $4,400 Art Programs $1,000 Technology $425 Grants to Other Programs $12,000 (This is the recommended allocation for 2005)

If the government does de-list the wolves in the Rocky Mountains, it will be each state's responsibility to manage them effectively so that they do not decline to the point where re-listing is necessary.

States need to have management plans that will continue to maintain wolf populations in a responsible manner. To date, only Montana and Oregon have management plans that will accomplish this, but there are no known wolf populations in Oregon at this time. Other states, including Wyoming, Utah and Washington do not have adequate conservation management plans in place. 2006.

Hills, a violinist, was one of two winners in the Don Bushell Concerto Competition. The competition is offered each spring to provide professional development and an exclusive concert performance opportunity for outstanding area soloists. Winners of the competition also receive a financial grant for continuing his/her music interests and education as well as the potential for promotional appearances, including print, radio, and publicity events. Immediately following the performance, Ms. Hills will be traveling to New York City where she has been invited to audition at the Manhattan School of Music.

Get in The Loop

VashonBePrepared§

Free CERT training starts March 17! Eight Fridays, 6 to 10 pm plus one Saturday drill For info contact Catherine or Michael Cochrane certvashon@yahoo.com or 463-4558

Preparing for "The Big One"

Free CERT Classes

The Red Cross plans to conduct an eight hour (8 a.m. to 4 p.m.) Shelter Orientation and Shelter Simulation class on Saturday, February 18. This is a rare chance for the class to be given on the island. The class will be free but advance registration required. Please call 463-3770 or 567-5274 for more information or to register.

The Vashon-Maury unit of the Red Cross has been helping families devastated by house fires, etc. on the Island for over ten years. Now they are also working with the Vashon Disaster Preparedness Coalition (VDPC) to be able to respond to shelter and feeding needs if we are hit by a major, area-wide disaster.

Red Cross sets up agreements with churches and other organizations around the Island to potentially use these sites as shelters if needed. VDPC estimates that 600 people could be stranded on the Island if a disaster affected the whole region and the ferries were out of commission. There would be an urgent need for help in the shelters. Once people make sure they and their families are OK, many open their hearts and try to help their community. If they had prior Red Cross training, they could be much more effective helpers much sooner.

Free Laughter Class (No Kidding)

There will be a free laughter class facilitated by Weslie Rodgers & Nora Wingate on Sunday, February 19, at 3:00 p.m. at Human Touch, the studio behind the Malt Shop in Beck's Plaza.

No humor is involved. Rather we engage the body in silly activities accompanied by a variety of laughs. By learning how to simulate mirthful laughter, we can coax the laughter to show itself more freely and regularly. The physical benefits of such a practice are significant; reduced stress, better circulation, improved digestion, and a feeling of vitality. What's not to like! "We don't laugh because something is funny; something is funny because we laugh." The next Community Emergency Response Team Training (CERT) will start on March 17 from 6 to 10 p.m. It will run for eight Fridays in a row, ending on May 5, 2006. In addition, the class includes an all day drill on Saturday, April 29.

The class is free and includes training in personal preparedness; fire suppression; disaster medical training; search and rescue; disaster psychology; and CERT organization, command and control. Former attendees rave about the classes.

Vashon CERT training prepares volunteers to act as interim first responders in the event of a disaster. For more information, or to sign up, please contact certvashon@yahoo.com or call Catherine and Mike Cochrane at 463-4558.

$19,000 to art and music programs at all three schools.

Every year, the auction gains more support. This year the PTSA has already lined up more than 30 local artists and parents to lead classroom art projects. Island trades people are donating skills and time to help produce and publicize the event. And island musicians will perform, including Vashon Jazz Band, Tate Held on acoustic guitar, as well as additional ensembles.

You can contribute too, by donating items. A sampling from last year's auction includes: a children's garden tea party; a fabulous Greek dinner; a four-night ski vacation at Big White in British Columbia; 16 hours of carpentry expertise from Ed Palmer; artwork by Laura Davidheiser, Caroyn Buehl and Julie Speidel; and a wide variety of valuable and affordable services. This year island artists Hita Von Mende and Janice Wall have already contributed two gorgeous pieces.

Troy and Marie Get Warm Feet

There is nothing as nice as stepping out of bed barefoot (or in your sleeping socks) onto a warm floor with in-floor heating. As we learned, it's a luxury that actually saves you money in the long run by dramatically cutting your home heating costs. Matt Hallam-Eames, who works for Schmeets Energy and Plumbing, is positively passionate on the subject. He can be reached at (206) 463-7586.

Marie: Matt, you have a fascinating background. Tell us about yourself.

- Matt: Five years ago I switched careers, from being a systems analyst to a being a commercial plumber's apprentice. I drove my bosses crazy by constantly asking them to teach me about the multiple facets of plumbing, including heating. Early in my plumbing education I worked on several small to medium radiant systems. This was a subject that I became completely absorbed in. I have a keen interest in sustainable living and in finding ways to cut our dependency on fossil fuels. Currently, designing and building highly optimized home heating and hot water systems is my passion.
- Troy: So in-floor heating is an energy efficient system?
- Matt: Yes, it is. Statistics range from 20% to 60% more efficient.
- Marie: And it's more cozy! That's just as important as energy efficiency in my book. But how does it work?
- Matt: It's quite simple, really. A radiant floor heating system consists of a series of tubes installed under the floor that circulate warm water. The water can be heated by a solar source, or by a boiler using fossil fuel or electricity. The heat from the water circulating under the floor radiates into the room above.
- Troy: I know that some systems use the hot water from a home's hot water tank. Is this a good idea?

Getting ready to sell your home? Give us a call at (206) 463-LIST (5478) or send an email to marie @kwvashon.com. We'd love to work for you.

- Matt: Emphatically, no! That kind of system has several problems. For one, the water in a hot water tank has to be heated from ice cold to 160 degrees. This takes a lot of energy. In a closed system (where the water is used only for heating the floor) the temperature varies only by about 10 degrees, requiring much less energy. Plus, using "new" water in an in-floor system means you are circulating things in your system that can potentially cause problems – like oxygen from the water.
- Marie: You've explained that an in-floor system is more energy efficient (and therefore cheaper to run). But does it cost more to install?
- Matt: Yes, the cost to install is usually 20% to 30% more than for a conventional system, but it's paid for by the lower energy bills. The cost of installation is less when there are crawl spaces and when there is the potential for opening ceilings and interior walls. There are also above floor options. Cost really varies depending on the type of floor, and the type or heating system used to heat the water.
- Troy: Can you install an in-floor system in an existing house, or is it strictly for new construction?
- Matt: New construction is optimal, of course, but it can definitely be installed under an existing floor.
- Marie: I imagine the house would be a lot less dirty, too, without all that dust and dander and nasty stuff being blown through the house. Troy, I think in floor heating is going on my wish list, right after the kitchen remodel. Matt, we'll be in touch.

Keep Vashon's Parks Alive – Vote March 14

By Julie Burman, Friends of the Parks

"Keep Our Parks" is the theme of the 2006 Park Levy campaign. 4-H kids are making signs to post around town. You'll see the one pictured above in car windows, and we'll be waving recycled signs at the Bank Road Intersection.

This is a grass-roots campaign spearheaded by Islanders who love our Parks and want to keep them alive. We ask you to join us and vote YES again for Parks on March 14!

Is this tax something new?

No. We vote to renew this levy every four years saying YES to keep our parks and community programs alive. The levy is 100 percent of the Park District's operation and maintenance funds. The rate is 45 cents per $1000 of your property's assessed value. It is the same as Vashon voters approved in 2002. More of the same good Vashon Park stuff. All our money stays right here.

Why does Vashon have its own Park District?

Because we want local control and more Parks and fun programs than King County will provide. Jensen Point. Paradise Ridge. Ober Park. Pt. Robinson. Fisher Pond. Lisebuela. Village Green. Tramp

Letters to the Editor: editor@vashonloop.com Have mercy: keep it to 300 words or fewer. Thanks.

dock. Fern Cove. Harbor Wingehaven. These are the crown jewels of the Island and we need a Park District to be able to keep them.

What do we get for the Park Levy money?

Over 700 kids get to play ball, ride horses, and dance -150 of them get scholarships to 50 programs ranging from sailing to baseball to ballet. We get 8 summer concerts at Ober and Village Green. Our fields and community lawns are mowed 1000 times. Trashcans are emptied 3000 times. The list goes on and on. And, the Park District has an impeccable record of fiscal responsibility. Good value for our asked questions: hard earned money.

What if the Levy should fail?

No money to keep the Parks open — over time they'd be gated Our Parks and "mothballed." would look derelict fast. No access to fields for baseball, soccer, and lacrosse. No summer concerts. No skate park. No ability to accept ownership of the Pt. Robinson property from the Coast Guard. No future restroom at the Village Green or covered arena at Paradise Ridge.

Voting YES for Parks is a good bargain. Parks make me proud to live on Vashon. They're good for our kids and our sanity. And they maintain our property values.

So, let's vote YES once again to Keep Our Parks alive. Please vote on March 14.

You cannot teach those you do not love

You cannot teach those you do not love—you cannot reach those you do not love. If you equate someone with Hitler or Stalin you will be written off if all you do is make the assertion. If you continually mock visual or verbal ticks expect to be ignored or worse, deprecated in return. If you only attend to your particular preacher or choir don't be surprised if you are baffled by those you haven't tried to understand. I am not saying "agree with." I am saying don't make the mistake of always choosing to see the worst of a group or position. We all deal in stereotypes; it makes life easier day-to-day. In the long run it makes it more impossible. You don't have to live in a gated community but most people prefer it. Indeed it would seem that the most extreme of either end of the spectrum mirror each other almost perfectly. It reminds me of my junior and senior years of high school-the rabid extreme Republicans on one side, the radical Students for a Democrat Society on the other and the mass of the rest of us hoping they would kill each other off so we could get on with it. Be thankful for your opponent, yea, even your enemy. They show you your faults, they even show you the questions you should be asking. Disagree with the answers if you must, but choose to stay engaged even if you are hanging on by your fingernails. Personal morality does matter but so does how we deal with the poor. Personal responsibility is a necessity but so is a willingness to see others as fallible human beings with histories that need respectful treatment and dedicated, tactful help to overcome. Recognize that the women's movement is more than abortion and that the family is not simply a patriarchal plot. Morality is not an either/or proposition with the private and public spheres separated. Experts of whatever stripe may be of some help but our genius and task as a people is to, together, work it out and decide for ourselves. Too many people have died without a choice; too many people have given all they have that we might choose or not. And not choosing is a choice but a shameful one. ## School Levy FAQ

By Mary Kay Rauma

On Tuesday, March 14, 2006, Vashon-Maury Island residents will vote on a replacement Maintenance and Operations levy for the Vashon Island School District.

Here are answers to frequently

How is this levy different from the Capital levy we passed in November 2005?

The Levy in November of 2005 was a Capital levy. This is a Maintenance and Operations levy (M & O levy) and provides approximately 19% of our District's funding for its General Fund. The General Fund pays for district expenses such as teacher salaries, textbooks, curriculum supplies, special needs instructional programs, transportation, food services, extracurricular activities, and day-to-day operating costs.

Is this a new levy?

This M & O levy replaces the levy passed 4 years ago and will maintain our school staffing and programs at present levels.

If this is a renewal of the M & O levy passed 4 years ago, why do the projection charts reflect a .30 increase per $1,000 assessed property value?

The $1.53 is that amount the Board is requesting to levy over the next 4 years. We will not actually be allowed to collect that rate of tax if property values remain level or increase. The rate of tax is also based on a specific dollar amount that we are allowed to request from voters, determined by levy lid laws. We are requesting $3.162 million for calendar year 2007.

Editor, The Loop:

For three decades Islanders have voted for a better future for our children

What percent of the District's total program is paid for by the M & O Levy?

The levy represents approximately 19% of the District's total expenditures.

Doesn't Washington State fund basic education?

Despite our state's own constitutional mandate that we amply provide for our children's education, our state ranks well below the national average and, based on the U.S. Department of Education, our state is ranked 42nd in per-pupil spending. This degree of funding does not fund class sizes at the level our community desires, athletics, and other activities. Some required services, such as special education, are not completely funded through the State.

What happens if the levy should fail?

The District would need to reduce $3,003,287 from its 2007-2008 operating budget. Reductions will be necessary in teaching staff, administration, clerical staff, instructional aids, special needs programs, and curriculum supplies. The Vashon community has supported the M & O levy for more than 25 consecutive years.

To learn more about the March 14 levy, go to the Vashon School District website, www.vashonsd.org, attend one of the informational meetings (see box), attend a School Board meeting, or contact one of the School Board Directors listed on the website.

when we vote to replace the school operation tax levy. We want to buy a better education for our children than the state legislature provides on average.

An additional benefit in recent years is that the replacement levy is at the same rate as the expiring levy. Newcomers building and buying homes here boost the overall value of Island property. This is part of the reason the rate can stay the same despite generally rising costs.

In a way we are selfish. Our children will be making our Social Security payments someday. As a society we've already decided that.

What's more, it's clearer than ever that better educated folks earn more in a lifetime than poorly educated folks overall, so the tax will be less of a burden, relatively, than before. In that light voting for a better education may be viewed as an investment in economic stability and growth.

and carried by the dogcatcher. Yappers OK for cameo. Cast members will be present to work with dogs in auditions. Show up at one o'clock, you and your little dog, too. Oops. Wrong musical. Arf.

Somewhere in the past I read, or heard it said, that the "terrible twos" (threes, fours, etc.) were rehearsal for having teenagers. The angry defiance, the willfulness, the saying, "No!" to everything – that's the parents, mind you – yes, the very young child can be contrariness personified.

preschooler is as a trilling spring freshet compared to the imaginative exploits of the teenager, which would be more like the rapids of the Colorado River at flood stage. I'm not naming any names here, but I have never known a three-year-old who stole cars or smoked dope or tobacco or got drunk on school of three-year-old yet, but I hope I'm right.

Having said all that, do you remember Bizarro Superman (©DC Comics)? He was Superman's clone, and came from the cubic planet Bizarro World, where everything was the opposite of earth. Bizarro Lois would go to Ugliness the Parlor to get her hair messed up, for example.

The memory of Bizarro emerged recently as our resident three-year-old, grand our daughter, began speak to in opposites.

go home." Seeing my husband's truck in the parking lot, she'd say, "Lolo isn't here." If she looked you straight in the eye and said, "I don't have a camera," you would be safe telling her to hand it over. It has taken me a while to get used to this form of communication, but I think I'm getting the hang of it. If she says she doesn't want a bath, if she says she doesn't want to be read to, if she says she doesn't want to go to bed, the surest way to provoke tears and wails of grief is to believe those assertions. She does want the bath, and to be read to, and to go to bed, but for some reason, at this stage, she says she doesn't, and woe unto me if I believe her. One of my greatest failings as a parental unit is my willingness to treat the child as an equal whose opinions I respect. This is a big mistake. I know that I'm supposed to be the adult and she's supposed to be the child and I'm supposed to set clear boundaries and have a structure that will give her the security of knowing that the adult is in charge. I have learned this, I have learned that saying, "No," is Still, I say unto you, a difficult not child abuse, but I still say witless things like, "Would you like to use the potty?" Or I'll tell her to do something and she'll propose an alternative and I'll say, "Hmm, that sounds like a good idea." This sort of thing confuses children, and gives them the wrong idea, that they have equal power.

I have a little mantra: "Don't ask nights. Maybe I haven't met that sort her, tell her," but I seldom remember to follow through. Consequently I

I like to think that we are both learning and growing, and that Bizarro three-year-old will be a cute memory someday, like the memory of her father going through a phase of wearing his clothes backwards when he was twelve. We thought that was pretty silly, but had no idea what was to come after he turned thirteen.

Skillful Starting

Do you get confused or stuck before you even start on a goal? Do you spin your wheels trying to find the best way to get started? If you want to put yourself in gear, a bias a mountain: lots of little paths at the bottom will converge at the top.

experience of that nanosecond of decision before action. Practice finding the start-button and initiative becomes easier. Didn't pick up that pencil? Then notice that experience of inertia.

3) Pick one action. Reduce the start of your goal to a ridiculously simple task. Before you find a school's registration deadline you may need to find a phone book or even find paper to write down a phone number. In moments of procrastination the smallest task can become an obstacle. Simplifying and imagining the smallest of tasks helps the brain rehearse saying "yes." 4) Make yourself accountable. Decide when you want to take this one action. Then have a friend ask you how it turned out. Whether this makes you feel accountable to your friend or to yourself, accountable is what you want to be. Goals generally have a beginning, middle, and end. Overcoming the inertia in one phase helps us rehearse "starting skills" for the next phase. Think about it: the very last day of working on your goal, you will be starting on it all over again. തതത

Starting projects is a skill that can be learned and practiced. These four exercises will also improve your ability to start projects.

1) Brainstorm on paper. For example, if you've decided to change jobs, you may be trying to figure out whether to go back to school. For two minutes, write down every step in the process of going back to school Oh yeah. It's the advent of that you can imagine. Do you need to know a registration date? Visit the school? Get advice?

Don't Forget the Birds

By Ed Swan

Vireos

Besides Red-winged Blackbirds returning, late February marks the beginning of song for a lot of birds that live here year-round. Juncos and Song Sparrows start singing and an often difficult to find bird, the Hutton's Vireo.

The Hutton's Vireo is almost as common as the Warbling Vireo on the islands but it sings in the late winter and early spring. Though it will sing occasionally at all times of the year, even in the midst of winter, its call pierces the woods from mid-February through April. Its "wheo wheo wheo" call, a two note strong whistle, can be heard all over Vashon.

Without the song, Hutton's Vireo is often hard to find because it often moves singly and slowly through the branches as it gleans for insects. It is usually found in mixed deciduous and coniferous forests, a common habitat on Vashon and Maury Island. Hutton's Vireos look much like the Ruby-crowned Kinglet but have a thicker, vireo bill, blue legs, generally much slower movements and their eye-ring isn't complete as with a kinglet.

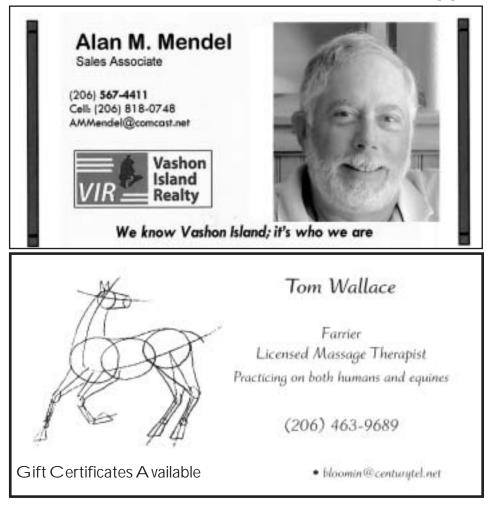

When most of the neotropical migrants have yet to arrive, the Hutton's Vireos already possess a built nest. Rich Siegrist found a nest being built in the first week of April one year. It was placed on an alder branch and he later saw the female sitting on the nest at Maury Island Regional Park.

During the winter they may be found singly or sometimes in the company of mixed species flocks of kinglets, chickadees and nuthatches. Paradise Valley, Pt. Robinson, Westside Highway in the Colvos and Cove areas and the Island Center Wetlands make some of the best places to search.

The first spring migrant arrived recently with a male Rufous Hummingbird driving off an Anna's Hummingbird at Brenda Sestrap's house. To make sure you are seeing a Rufous hummer instead of an Anna's, look for the bright rusty brown on the side of a male Rufous and light brown on the lower side of the female. Anna's males have a red throat similar to a rufous but are only green above and white below otherwise. A recent Rainier Audubon Society field trip found some great birds at Pt. Robinson: a Snow Bunting, a Black Scoter and our earliest recorded Turkey Vulture. The vulture might possibly be one that stayed in the Puget Sound area for the winter but is more likely an early spring migrant.

Kathryn True saw two beautiful Hooded Mergansers in an unusual place, the pond with the miniature church by the highway. Brant geese have been along the shore at Portage in Tramp Harbor almost every day recently. The unusual Canada Geese in the field next to the monument at Monument Road turned out to be six Cackling Canada Geese, two of the Cackling or minima subspecies and four taverni or Taverner's Canada Geese. These are the first confirmed sightings of the smaller Canada Goose species since the species was split into large and small form two years ago. If you have a question about birds or have an interesting sighting, call me at 463-7976 or e-mail at edswan@centurytel.net.

Two events coming up are Steve Caldwell's Birding By Ear class starting this spring (call Steve at 463-5778 to sign up) and the monthly on-island field trip. Identification of birds by vocalization is not only enjoyable but often the only way to know for sure what bird you're seeing in some cases, so Steve's class is great for the beginning or experienced bird watcher. The field trip should be good. Both of the last two month's trips found the Snow Bunting at Pt.

Robinson.

Bike-to-Work Gets a Bit Easier- Maybe

The sun is out today, or at least it was a few minutes ago, so it is not such a stretch for many of us to think about climbing on that bike and getting out for a bit of a ride. In truth, the rains have never been an overriding deterrent for going out and logging some mileage on two wheels — at least around here. If you let the rain stop you in these parts it might be a long time 'til your next training ride, especially given our most recent string of sodden days and weeks. The thing is, though, that I don't really HAVE to get on my bike, which is why there are times when I feel just a twinge of jealousy towards those who have to go somewhere else to work. I have joked at times about the grand circular faux commute getting up in the morning and getting on the bike and riding out somewhere and then back home to start the workday. But then the practical side kicks in and says hey, you're already at work so let's get to it! There is always the worry, too, that on a nice day, a brief training spin might turn into an all-day distance fest. Sometimes it's just better not to tempt the fates. It is true that I sometimes bike commute in order to train, at times logging eighteen miles each way by bike with an hour swim stuck there in the middle. But the idea of spending an hour in the rain getting wet on the bike followed by an hour of total immersion in the pool followed by another hour of getting even wetter — and more than likely a lot colder — on the way home, somehow loses its appeal back there during the pre-swim soaking. So for me, this is more of a fairer weather option. On the other hand, the other half of this household rode her bike to work a hundred times last year, and at thirty plus miles a commute that tends to add up. What also adds up is the savings in gas and ferry fares, along with the health and fitness benefits one experiences in the process.

As a part of my connections with the Community Council and the Spokespeople over the past year I have gotten to know another bike commuter, Henry Haselton. In 2005, as in years past, Henry logged thousands of bike miles both in commute time and in training rides. And while he usually prefers to ride the whole distance into work, there are those times when a bus connection is necessary. There were also times when Henry missed that critical bus connection, not because he was late to the boat, but because when he did get on the boat he found that WSF policy kept him from getting to the bow to off load with the foot passengers. Henry missed his bus connection because he had to wait till the cars had finished unloading, and by that time the bus he had wanted to catch was long gone. So, in true Islander fashion, he decided to do something about it, and what follows is an account of the changes in the works for this policy. The Vashon Spokespeople bike advocacy group and Washington State Ferries have worked together to develop a revised bicycle loading policy to better facilitate bicycle-ferry-bus connectivity during normal commuting hours. In the past, when cyclists were loading onto a ferry that was full of cars they had to leave their bikes at the stern, often resulting in missed bike-to-bus connections. Through direct negotiations with WSF, this policy has been revised as follows: Starting February 1, 2006, on Monday through Friday during the hours of 4:00 a.m. to 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m., deck crews will make every effort to load vehicles in the wings in order to maximize the lane space between vehicles. Cyclists will be allowed to move their bicycles forward through the wing lanes only and will not be required to remain at the stern of the vessel, as they have been in the past. Cyclists may not carry their bikes over their heads, and must keep at least one wheel on the deck to accomplish this move. Ferry captains will be informing all crew members of this change, and these crews will be asked to make every effort to comply with the policy. It must be understood, however, that it may not always cyclists follow all applicable rules and regulations pertaining to loading, unloading and operating your bike on the ferries. As the Spokespeople's representative for this project, Henry has agreed to work with WSF in educating all bicycle commuters on this new policy. Please help him by informing other cyclists of this policy, following the rules, and being cooperative.

One rule that WSF has specifically asked us to be mindful of is that cyclists wishing to load or off load with walk-on passengers MUST walk their bicycles. Cyclists wishing to ride their bicycles on or off the vessel must wait until the walk on passengers clear the transfer span before loading or departing. Again, this policy will be in a trial phase for six months, and during that time adjustments may be made at WSF's discretion. If successful, this procedure will be entered into the WSF policy manuals at the end of the trial period. Let's make sure that For additional information about this new policy, Henry can be contacted at 463-2098, or through email at Henry.Haselton@gmail.com.

be possible to meet the requirement of maximizing lane space between vehicles, so there may be times when cyclists are asked to remain at the stern.

Part of this effort is aimed at making the bike-on-bus option a more reliable connection, and will hopefully encourage more people to consider bicycling as a viable commuting option. Negotiating this change was not easy, and it will be on a trial only basis for the next six months. Therefore, it is requested that bicyclists be as cooperative and courteous to crews as the crews have been asked to be toward you. As an additional reminder, it is extremely important that all

The USDA is getting some heat for inadequately enforcing regulations on genetically engineered (GE) crops, but this time the heat's not from environmental groups, it's from the agency's own auditor. According to a two year long safety audit by the United States Office of Inspector General, the USDA "lacks basic information about the field test sites it approves and is responsible for monitoring, including where and how the crops are being grown, and what becomes of them at the end of the field test."

The government report goes on to say: "Current (USDA) regulations, policies and procedures do not go far enough to ensure the safe introduction of agricultural biotechnology." After 10 years, GE crops now account for 114 million acres in the U.S., one-seventh of all crop acreage. Despite the USDA's negligence in enforcing GE crops regulations, Congress continues to refuse to require mandatory safetytesting and labeling of these experimental food products.

Mixing the common additives aspartame, an artificial sweetener, and monosodium glutamate (MSG) causes nerve cell damage, say researchers at the University of Liverpool. The results from a twoyear study were recently published in the journal Toxicological Sciences. The researchers found the additives were much more potent in combination with each other than on their own. Mice were exposed to concentrations of MSG and aspartame relative to what a child would receive in an average snack and drink. Researchers were surprised to see the additives interfered with nerve signaling systems and actually stopped the nerve cells from growing. Aspartame is commonly found in diet drinks, candies and flavored medicines, while MSG is frequently found in chips, processed cheese and many processed foods.

The Southern Italian town of chains" by supporting local businesses. Five years ago, McDonald's revealed plans to open a fast food restaurant in the town. Area citizens, supported by Italy's Slow Food movement, campaigned against the development by establishing their own group "Friends of Cardoncello" (named after an Italian mushroom). Despite community opposition, McDonald's built a fast food store in town, but struggled over the next few years, as townspeople's shunned the golden arches and supported local baker Luigi Digesù and other community restaurants. Last month, McDonald's closed its doors and left town. "There was no marketing strategy, no advertising promotion, no discounts," Il Giornale, an area resident commented. "It was just that people decided the baker's products were better. David has beaten Goliath."

Some bad ideas should never have taken root. Secretly growing food crops like corn or rice that are genetically engineered to produce powerful drugs and chemicals is a bad idea, no matter how you look at it. Experimental "biopharm" crops have been grown in open fields across the nation. When bees, wind, rain, or birds spread pollen and seeds across the landscape, the drugs and chemicals travel right along with them to pollinate other plants or be eaten by wildlife. They could even end up in your breakfast.

Despite the threat of contamination, the consequences of experimenting with our food supply and environment are being hidden like the crops themselves. The biotech industry downplays the dangers and refuses to share any information — such as the location of test fields. Likewise, the government has been more interested in protecting these companies' profits than in protecting residents, the environment, or our food supply. – Compiled from EarthJustice and organicconsumers.org.

The Dorsal Spin: Super Whale Sunday

by Orca Annie Stateler

Hallelujah, black blades at last! At February's onset, we endured a power outage and forty hours without running water. We were gravely concerned that our downstairs neighbors might be flooded by the three-foot swells crashing over our bulkhead during the February 4 storm. Then Raven let the sun out of the box on February 5, and Mark Sears called early that morning with joyful news that he spied killer whales by Blake Island.

When Mark arrived at the scene, he found a dozen Transients, a Super Whale Sunday squad. At least six of them were tackling an adult male harbor seal. Like colossal predatory cats, the orcas toyed with the seal for more than an hour, batting him around with their rostrums, flippers, and flukes. Mark was careful to maintain a safe distance while he took ID photos; nevertheless, the terrified seal sought escape by trying to jump in his boat.

The seal was not bleeding and showed no visible wounds. Mark is unsure whether the formidable fins actually killed or ate their beleaguered quarry, who just disappeared into the drink. If the Transients dispatched him underwater, they were exceedingly efficient and left no scraps or telltale "seal slick" to float to the surface. The seal may have simply drowned. Maybe he survived.

From shore, Odin and I caught a distant glimpse of the tumultuous activity. When they were not gathered for the seal hunt, the "wolves of the sea" were spread out, traveling and surfacing unpredictably between Blake Island and Elliott Bay. The Super Whale Sunday pack consisted of mostly females and juveniles, with three adult males sporting prominent dorsal fins.

Off Bainbridge, they molested a California sea lion for a few minutes, and then released him uninjured. We are mystified why these killer whales expended so much energy capturing potential meals, only to mess around with them. Was this hunting class for the youngsters?

Mark confirmed the identity of male T87, who visited Colvos Pass about ten years ago and Dyes Inlet in May 2003. T87 has a rectangular slot near the top of his dorsal that looks like it was cut for a door hinge, though it is not manmade. The other two males have left-leaning kinks at the tips of their dorsals.

We see Transients so rarely in Vashon-Maury waters that our ID tools quickly become outdated. Moreover, many years can elapse between sightings of individual whales. Unlike Resident orcas, Transients often disperse from their natal groups, so we cannot assume all members of the Super Whale Sunday gang are related. The Center for Whale Research will look at Mark's film to verify additional IDs.

If the orcas passed the Vashon Hydrophone Project (VHP) site, they crept by quietly before daybreak, which is typical for these stealth hunters. Mark heard them vocalizing while they mauled the seal. Transients chat after kills or attempted kills.

Please report local whale sightings ASAP to 463-9041. With Transients boldly prowling the neighborhood, we suspect the Southern Residents are far away. I cling to the faint hope that J Pod might visit us in February or March. They have done so before. www

Happy Birthday Aquarius!

Doors that have long seemed closed or locked are now starting to open up, though you may not trust your own instincts. If you're finding yourself plagued or even mildly annoyed by doubts, I suggest you use them in your favor: see if they add up to anything, such as a picture of your state of mind; an image of the expectations you've come to have from the world; or a map to something better. The approaching Full Moon in your opposite sign Leo will be lighting your way to better places, but once you can see the way ahead, you will need to go forward and not waste time and opportunity hesitating.

Aries (March 20-April 19): You don't need to push as hard as you think to have a breakthrough. It's true that certain factors seem to be preventing you from acting with your usual spontaneous approach to existence, but others are opening entirely different pathways. You may be wondering what is at the root of a particular struggle regarding a personal relationship, and as it turns out, your own personal development is at the moment trumping partnership concerns. Take advantage of it while it lasts. Meanwhile, it's abundantly clear that you need new ideas about your personal relationships — ones that define commitment in a reasonable way, and that allow for a lot more of your individuality than you're accustomed to experiencing.

Taurus (April 19-May 20): For a while there it really did seem like a question of how long you could hold your breath in a cave, but it's nice to see you breathing again. You may be surprised at the extent to which you have room not only to breathe but also to stretch out and feel. Just remember that the problem with feelings is that they break the rules. You can't really control them, and they may be pushing you to open up a lot more than you've been accustomed to the past couple of months. But think back to a time not so long ago when you discovered how good it really feels to experience yourself in a spontaneous way, and that you don't need an excuse for doing so. Gemini (May 20-June 21): Get ready for a series of fast changes, though you'll be the one in the driver's seat if you take note of an idea that arrives over the next few days and put it into action. I recognize that you're in something of a birthing process, and approaching a critical and potentially scary moment of transformation. Your level of fear will rise or fall inversely with your level of creativity. But the surge of energy associated with Mars entering your birth sign later in the month will call for a high level of awareness and dedication to your own cause. Just remember, you're the one making the decisions.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): Stay tuned for financial news, as someone decides it's finally time to open up the coin bag. Who knows, it could even be love news, and if it is, this will be a development that comes directly on the heels of your stunning breakthrough in conscious self-respect; which came on the heels of a huge crisis of self-respect. If it somehow seems that others are more than you, or have more than you, forget it. What matters now, however, are all questions relating to the willingness to share, and whether the people around you notice the value of something called community. If they don't you're free to leave them behind.

Leo (July 22-Aug. 23): There has been so much pressure and movement around you that you may have forgotten what it feels like to be yourself. That old sensation comes back for a time with the Leo Full Moon, but remember, this is not an opportunity to move back to your old hometown, but rather to visit and take care of some old business. The movement and onrush of progress is likely to continue for the foreseeable future. Given this fact, it will be necessary to feel every day for the new person you have become. You are, however, likely to feel like a new person tomorrow and the day after that, so get used to it.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sep. 22): Has it occurred to you that you are what you have been resisting? If you don't have irrefutable proof of this within the next week, I'll eat a copy of the Full Moon chart. You tend to define yourself by insisting that you are not something, and then fairly steadily morphing into exactly that. I'm not saying there's anything wrong with this, but you could make your life simpler by allowing your goals, examples or role models to be that, in the positive sense of the action rather than by pushing away. It's really the difference between seeing the world as a child or an adult; that is, with or without the conscious power to choose. Libra (Sep. 22-Oct. 23): You have far more in the way of emotional resources than you've been allowing yourself to believe the past couple of months, as they seem to have slowly dwindled and left you living in rather Spartan conditions. But the thing that you discovered at the bottom of an empty cup was an endless wellspring. Try it out and see. But to do this, you'll need to open up and share. You will discover what you have by offering it to others, which contrary to the usual laws of economics, will give you more for yourself. It's just that this works better in practice than in theory. Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 22): You've had to get over the notion that something can't possibly be true. This is quite a long way from having it actually be true. The same process is working with an idea. It's a really brilliant idea, but it's still a long way from being real, because you're the one who has to give it life. Cultivate enough faith on the emotional level to feel safe in a certain domestic situation, and you'll have enough faith in an idea to actually put it into action. The two situations are not only related, they are one and the same thing. Note that moving toward success will feel like taking a risk too good not to let pass by.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 22): You're always one to dare the unlikely. That seems to be your personal invitation to take action. If it's easy, or likely, or typical, why bother? We usually end up working just as hard for the things we don't like as we do for the things we really do like. You at least have this figured out. Over the next few days a situation will present itself to you. It's not anything that you would typically "go for" but I suggest you give it a close look before remotely considering passing it by. It's not only what you really want, it's something you would be unable or unlikely to pursue or conquer otherwise.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 20): Something or someone is having an effect on you, and you're beginning to open up. You do this in stages, and the forthcoming is a peak in a cycle of progress that has gone around and around for perhaps two years. Think back about that far and consider how you would have responded to the current offer, situation or development. Consider how you are responding today. The difference is something called change, but this is deeper than the usual concept that gets attached to this word. You seem fully aware that beyond a certain point, there is no turning back, and that's precisely the point you need to grasp mentally, and reach physically. Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 19): This week's Full Moon in your opposite sign Leo will help you see another person's point of view, and show you how much you've been caught up in your own world. Given the intense concentration of planets in your own birth sign right now there is nearly no way you could avoid being fully self-absorbed, and I'd be concerned if you were not. But what you're about to discover is that the feelings of a person close to you are not nearly as limited or as negative as you may have (rightfully enough) suspected. You've been busy; they have been quiet. When they start speaking, make sure you're listening. Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): The rapid series of developments that moves through your life over the next week or so will more than compensate for anything you've felt you've been missing in your life. It's true that your friends have been a little out of sorts, and it wasn't just an act. This has put you under a lot of pressure to be self-sufficient, if only because nobody could really see your point of view. Not only will others be able to see your perspective, it'll seem a lot more obviously desirable to indulge them. Besides which, with one set of pressures or burdens lifted from your shoulders, you'll have a lot more energy available to enjoy the vastly improved pace of progress. თთთ

Getting Rid of Allergies

There is probably still a lot of winter weather yet to come but the pollen producing trees are already gearing up for their spring mating dance. If you are allergic to their abundant pollen, you should act now to make your body less reactive this coming spring.

Several of my friends have almost completely eliminated their allergy symptoms by taking probiotic strain Lactobacillus mushroom products, faithfully and long-term. One friend has asthma and severe pollen allergies. А mushroom tincture containing maitake reduced his symptoms somewhat the first year. He has now been taking it for three years, and says his allergies are all but gone. Another friend found that a steady course of Hostdefense (made by New Chapter) reduced her symptoms the first year and now seems to have cleared them completely.

It appears that some plant polysaccharides reduce allergy symptoms by acting on the immune system balance. The human for itchy, runny eyes that many Feed your gut bacteria with apples, immune system uses a multitude of people use topically. It is a bitter miso, shoyu, sea weed, and yoghurt chemical messengers to direct its billions of immune cells, and maintain an appropriate balance between two types of T-helper (Th1 and Th2) cells. People with allergies are in a state of Th2 dominance that is likely responsible for their overreaction to harmless but invasive things like pollen. Mushrooms contain a variety of complex sugars (polysaccharides), and clinical studies show that isolated mushroom polysaccharides shift the system back to a better Th1/ Th2 balance. It is likely that other plants rich in polysaccharides, such as astragalus, burdock, dandelion root, and all-heal, also have this ability. They have long been used as tonics to normalize the body, which is also how medicinal mushrooms have been used traditionally.

Studies also show that maintaining the right mixture of intestinal bacteria can moderate allergy symptoms, and beneficial intestinal bacteria seem to thrive on complex polysaccharides. Studies show that people with diets high in miso, seaweed, and apples have far fewer allergies, and that shoyu (a naturally brewed soy sauce) can reduce allergy symptoms. Each of those foods contains complex sugar molecules. There is also a study showing that eating yoghurt regularly reduces allergies. Yoghurt does not contain polysaccharides but, if it contains live cultures, seeds the intestine with beneficial bacterial strains. These strains can also be taken as probiotic supplements, and studies indicate that probiotics also prevent allergies. One study followed infants who were given a good strain of E. coli and found they had significantly fewer allergies 10 years later than controls did. The > plantarum inhibited allergic responses to house dust mites in rats.

Another distinct approach to quieting seasonal allergies involves using herbs that stimulate the liver so it is more able to process waste generated by the allergic reaction. These herbal formulas usually include herbs to moderate the immune system's overreaction to pollen as well. This my favorite liver-stimulating herbs. approach has not been studied and its benefit remains an old wife's tale if you will, like so many herbal included in such allergy formulas. Eyebright is a time-honored remedy tasting plant that stimulates the liver, and actually works better for allergy symptoms if taken internally rather than used topically. Unfortunately, eyebright is a tiny North Country plant that is endangered because of its popularity and Michael Moore (the herbalist) recommends using ragweed instead of eyebright in allergy formulas. This may seem counterintuitive as many people are allergic to ragweed pollen but most people are only allergic to the airborne pollen not the plant tincture. I combine ragweed with yerba mansa, Oregon grape root, all heal, and yerba santa to help reduce allergy symptoms if it is taken a month or so before allergy season. All heal, one of the ingredients, is a

The Dreams of Dragons, by Lyall Watson. Paperback, Destiny Books, 1992, $12.95.

A decade ago Lyall Watson found himself pondering such intriguing questions as:

How come no one ever sees unicorns anymore? Why do geese fly in a Vee formation? Why do dragons figure so prominently and fearfully in so many mythologies?

So he wrote a book to shed light on this amazing world we've inhabited for so long, yet still don't fully understand. He's not aiming to provide precise answers to life's persistent questions (to borrow a phrase from Guy Noir, Private Eye). He'd rather encourage a sense of wonder. Hence the book's subtitle: An Exploration and a Celebration of the Mysteries of Nature.

An anthropologist, biologist, chemist, geologist and half a dozen other –ists, Watson is basically a scientific snoop with a very open mind. He's fascinated by the incongruous, the unusual belief, the phenomena for which there's scanty scientific evidence. Because, he says, "In the course of human evolution, a change of mind, a new idea, can have as much survival value and adaptive significance as the mutation of a gene."

In one chapter he takes up the way animals can purposefully make their way to places they've never been to reunite with their owners. Those who have studied this behavior call it "psitrailing." It may indicate that other species and organisms use a faculty similar to what we call extra-sensory perception. For example, some Soviet scientists interested in "distant intercellular interactions" took two samples from the same tissue culture, sealed each securely in separate glass containers, placed them next to each other (within "optical distance") and added poison to one of the containers. Naturally the contaminated cells sickened and died. But 12 hours later so did the control sample.

What goes on here? Maybe it's "sympathy" between similar cells even when physically separated. Watson agrees this would be an outrageous idea if we didn't have other evidence of similar occurrences, which he proceeds to cite. Most affecting is the story of Sugar, a Persian cat who became separated from its owners when they moved from California to Oklahoma-where Sugar had never been. Nevertheless, impelled by the bond of love that bound cat and owners, by the "resonance" between them, Sugar traveled 1,920 miles over rough terrain and found its old friends in their new home.

A University of Washington researcher filmed this and found that one bird on the edge of the flock starts the process, the next bird reacts and so on and so on. Reaction time goes from 62 milliseconds down to 15 until the whole flock seems to be one undulating entity. Watson is pleased to compare this with the way a chorus line's reaction time speeds up as it passes from one dancer to the next so when each one sees the wave coming she anticipates its arrival and kicks well ahead of what normal reaction time would be.

"It looks as though birds and chorus girls have more in common than their customary feathers," observes Watson.

Elsewhere Watson considers what makes a place sacred: Delphi in Greece, Ayer's Rock in Australia, Glastonbury Tor in England, Stonehenge, etc. Wherever holy places exist, they have a history and legends tell of their discovery. They're found because of a dream, vision or divine omen that somehow persists. "I am convinced," says Watson, "that the special feel of holy places is real and that in responding to them we are not just being carried along by their reputation."

How would we go about establishing a new holy place? We might pay attention to animals, who seem to sense some quality of the location that escapes us. For instance, when Celtic monks of Lindisfarne were looking for a place to bury their founder they followed a stray cow. Durham Cathedral marks the spot today.

Or we could use feng-shui, the Chinese science and art of finding a magical link between man and landscape, pinpointing the exact spot for a temple or a toolshed. Watson brings remarkable clarity to feng-shui and the motivating principle of ch'i that links spirit and substance. "It really works," he says. But how? Well, it may have something to do with where Mother Earth's gravity is exceptionally high or low; and with a newly discovered fact that every 12 hours the earth throbs. "Is this ch'i, bubbling up through cracks in the planet?" No matter. Watson believes an awareness of natural rhythm is part of our birthright, a gift from Mother, whatever its source. "With one ear to the ground, you can almost hear her great heart beating. It is a very comforting sound."

He's a graceful writer, wellinformed and curious. The book's crammed with bits you'll want to read aloud to whoever's in the vicinity. "Oho! I never thought of it that way!" pops into the reader's mind on nearly every page, whether the subject is the essential logic of the practices of headhunters in Papua New Guinea, or what happened to all those unicorns. (It may be that we seldom see them because, as a result of persecution by England's Royal College of Heralds, they've become nocturnal.) KCLS doesn't have the book but the Seattle Library does. Or order it through your bookseller; like most of Watson's books, it's still in print. Or e-mail me, rachelb@raincity.com and I'll try to reborrow it from the friend who loaned it to me.

By Jonathan Shipley 40 Year Old Virgin

The first time you had sex. It happens to all of us at least once. Well, not all of us, or else there wouldn't be a movie about a 40-year-old virgin, a virgin we can laugh at and ridicule! HA! You haven't had sex yet and you're 40! HA! HA! HA! The movie, starring Steve Carrell (Golden Globewinner for The Office and formerly of The Daily Show with Jon Stewart among other great TV shows), is actually pretty funny but a bit, uh, crude, so it's probably not proper viewing at your church's ice cream social. But then again neither is The Passion of the Christ. Who wants to see a guy tortured when you're enjoying rocky road ice cream with little sprinkle winkles on top?

The first time I had sex? It happened on the car deck of the Klahowya ferry boat with a dog groomer. I'm kidding. Not really. It happened in the video game room of The Rock Pizza with an albino girl sixteen years my senior. I kid. She was only fifteen years older. When was the first time you had sex? Regret it? Wished you'd saved yourself for someone a little better? Someone who was, say, clear of acne? Or was it fabulous? Like a romance novel you find at Thriftway that has Fabio on the cover, the title being something along the lines of Destiny's Desire, or Prince at Moonlight? Either way, you had sex which is more than can be said for Andy Stitzer (Carrell), the dorky hero of Judd Apatow's movie. Apatow was once a roommate of Adam Sandler and created the shortlived, yet well-received, TV series "Freaks and Geeks." That gives you some idea to the brand of humor involved in the movie. There's lots of sex talk, naturally. Poo-poo talk. Mamma' wash your mouth out with Ivory soap-type talk. It's funny though, and through all the crudeness and crassness and blatant innuendo there's a sweet lovely wholesome spot right there in the middle. The story, if you haven't guessed from the title, is about a guy who hasn't had sex and so his buddies at the electronic store they all work at work at getting him in bed with a woman. Might that woman be Academy Award-nominee Catherine Keener (for this year's Capote) who works nearby at an Ebay store?

A sample of the script so you can tell if it's something you want to watch:

"Andy: 'You know how when you grab a woman's breast...it feels like...a bag of sand?'"

"David: 'What?!'"

Poor Andy, but we've all been there. Before we had sex we were just like him, not knowing much of anything, except for those uncomfortable movies they made us watch in seventh grade. And, honestly, that's when I lost my virginity. In seventh grade. With Gwendolyn Rogers before playing our instruments and marching in the prestigious Sequim Irrigation Festival parade. From then on I've never really looked at that word "irrigation" without lusty thoughts.

Then there's the nature of crowds. Crowds of dunlin, for instance, who take flight "like a single wheeling airborne creature, turning from light to dark as the birds pivot in unison."

Food for Lovers

When you think of edibles that put you in the mood for love, you probably don't think first of potatoes, right?

The famous lover and poet, Lord Byron, loved a certain potato casserole more than any other foods. Who invented Lord Byron's favorite dish? Perhaps his sister, Augusta Leigh. When his marriage of one year ended in separation, Harriet Beecher Stowe spread the rumor of an "indecent relationship" between Lord G. G. N. Byron and Augusta as the unstated reason. The scandal caused his downfall as a social idol in England. He left for Italy and Greece.

Perhaps the dish Lord Byron loved came from the kitchen of his later mistress, Contessa Teresa Guccioli, with whom he lived until the end of his life.

Those potatoes the Conquistadors took to home from Peru to Spain between 1534 and 1540 proved inexpensive and filling as European famine food, hospital fare and rations for soldiers and prisoners, but they tasted bland and watery. Reason: the Andeans from whom he got his seed potatoes always ate the biggest and best and saved the rejects for seed. Their potatoes became smaller and more inferior every year. European gardeners merely replicated old and the big russets for boiling or oven baking.

An average potato yields 30 milligrams of Vitamin C and 600 milligrams of potassium. If you boil yours, reserve the cooking water for soup, saving the potassium.

Dear Madame Toujours,

Yesterday was my twelfth birthday, and it was a totally bad day. My two best friends Becky and Jane and I went out for pizza, and it seemed like it was going to be okay, but then these two guys came in. They didn't pay any attention to me, and they invited my friends to go to a movie with them, and Becky and Jane said they wouldn't go without me, so the guys said, "Whatever," and they left. My friends said the guys were just jerks, but I could tell they really wanted to go out with them.

Anyway, is anybody ever going to think I am cool? I don't have any boobs yet, and my hair always looks gross. When I had to get braces, I cried and yelled until my Mom and Dad paid extra for the invisible kind that don't look dorky, but the mean girls at school just sneered at me and said I was stuck up, which I totally don't get. I mean, they make fun of me 'cause I'm not pretty, but if I try to look better, they don't like that either. Does it ever get any better? If not, I am thinking of moving to Antarctica to be a penguinologist or something, 'cause I just saw March of the Penguins, and if boys aren't ever going to like me, I might as well just do whatever I want.

Sincerely, Feel Like a Dork

Chere Mlle. Penguinologist,

But of course it is getting better. I am assuring you that everybody is having the boobs eventually, and the braces are going away, and the hairs are learning the disciplines, and just teenage boys, they are being usually when all the adorable, popular girls too silly to be the suitable dates for are starting to look tiresome and fat, the mature persons such as yourself you are becoming the graceful, elegant person with the selfassurances. Secretly, the perky, unkind girls, they are knowing this is not being necessary to choose and are resentful. What is more important, things are being already better than you are thinking. Oui, the friends were being flattered by the attention from the boy persons and were wanting to have the big, romantic time with the attractive fellows, but they wanted more the loyalty for you. Eh bien, if they are the little bit resentful, well this is only proving they are giving up the very large temptation for your sake. This is very charming, non?

For over two centuries Europeans scorned potatoes as food, though the pretty little lavender flowers ornamented pottery and flower gardens. Only the poorest people actually ate them. Some people thought potatoes poisonous because they are related to nightshade, and the green-skinned ones contained toxic solanine.

Around 1800 plant scientists began improving the species by growing from seeds of their best potatoes; only then did the vegetable gradually improve. Present day potatoes even if green skinned, contain too little solanine to bother anyone, and come in several colors and flavors. Favorites are the small pink ones, perfect for microwaving,

By Deborah Anderson For Good, For Jane Part 2: The Opposite of Fear Is Love

On the Tuesday before we were all supposed to gather to remember Jane. I apparently left the burner on low underneath the cast iron skillet in which I cook my eggs while I fix my oatmeal each morning. As I looked in horror at the potential tragedy that had not happened, and realized the house had not burned down, I was overwhelmed with humble gratefulness.

That night I ought to have come home to the charred remains of pictures I couldn't replace and hard copies of handwritten rough drafts of works in progress. I went to bed that night telling God that I could live without going to the reunion to celebrate my friend Jane's life that had been taken by an HMO plan that didn't authorize a defibrillator implant in time to keep her tired heart going. Resting comfortably, knowing I was not looking to the Red Cross for lodging that night having lost everything in a fire, was enough.

As I thought about missing the reunion, I thought about Jane. I wrote about her last June and included the words to the song "For Good" from the musical Wicked. Of all the columns I've written, time and again, that is the one you mention as having touched you most deeply.

But I did end up going. The miracle of the cast iron skillet was second only to three friends stepping in and saying, "You need to be there," and then making it possible. I found myself in a thirtyfourth floor suite that weekend playing the CD of the song to my nine friends (with three of our crowd unable to go for more pressing concerns at home) as we all wept together for the joy of having known Jane. Each of the women who had attended the funeral gave a full report of what it was like. We told Jane stories and laughed until we hurt and couldn't breathe. Jane always had a toothbrush in her mouth it seemed. Jane loved to take baths and then sing to us while playing her guitar. The song she sang every night was Paul McCartney's "Blackbird." It is to this day one my personal anthems. On Friday night we all gathered for our first event, dressed in our matching cheesy elastic pearl bracelets, watching Kenny Rankin opening for Jay Leno. Rankin was sitting alone on a folding chair in the middle of the stage, and said, "This is an oldie," and gently began the hammering on of the chords to "Blackbird." We all gasped, looked at each other and said with smiles on our faces, "Jane!" It was a glorious moment. Greeting each other as the weekend began had been over the top JOY. We kinda sorta recognized each other even, and graciously mentioned our names as wrinkles from too much sun in our adolescences, those ever creeping pounds and new hairstyles framed our physical representations. I had emailed everyone that my body had swelled mightily as I fought some hard personal battles but that I had just lost sixty pounds. I instructed them they were not to look and gag, but to say "You look mahvalous dahling!!!" They were very gracious, but with once shoulder-length locks that bespoke grace and ease, now shorn somewhat akin to Aslan's hairdo before the White Witch killed Him, it was obvious that I had let life beat me up pretty bad.

Saving the best for last, my closest friend Stacy tackled me and we hugged like we couldn't let go. We hadn't seen each other in thirty years. Some friendships are so God-ordained, they exist even when you aren't in contact with each other. Seeing each other was as if one us had slipped out of the room momentarily and just returned. We had not missed a beat.

We have the kind of honest friendship that nurtures one to higher ground. On Sunday, as the weekend was winding down, she walked beside me and said to me, "Of all of us, you were the last one I thought would get beat up. You were so strong and confident." I told her I was finding my strength again. The motto for our college is "Remember Who You Are and What You Represent." I remember.

There was one last thing she wanted to tell me. Our freshman year in college we had all been sitting around her room with a jug of Gallo playing Truth or Dare. The question was, "When did you lose your virginity," a fairly classic, sensational question for college women at one of those strong all-women college places where they were training us to stand forward in a world where others frequently say, "Stand back." It came to my turn, and because I was so comfortable with them all I decided to tell the truth for the first time in my life. "I didn't have any virginity to lose because I was raped when I was seven."

Ya know...I discovered that's really kind of a conversation stopper. The room got deathly quiet. Stacy had a look of horror on her face. Silence melted into definite discomfort. I vowed right there to never share again. It took twelve years to do so publicly once more. Now, I share freely and lead workshops and retreats for women trying to recover and reclaim themselves. Its nothing to be ashamed of.

I hope your Valentine's Day was a happy one. More than that, I hope you experience the love of a good friend who changes your life. Jane brought us all together and by remembering her example, we all gave each other the gift of timeless and priceless love. If Valentine's Day fell short on romance, forget romance. Call a friend today. Be Loved and Be Loving. It's the only thing that matters. Life is hard, and cruel and ragged around the edges. You are the unconditional acceptance someone is looking for.

But Did He Get the Quail?

Harry Whittington, 78, was "alert and doing fine" after Cheney sprayed him with shotgun pellets at the Armstrong Ranch, said property owner Katharine Armstrong.

Whittington "came up from behind the vice president and the other hunter and didn't signal them...or announce himself. The vice president didn't see him. A covey flushed and the vice president picked out a bird and was following it and shot. And by God, Harry was in the line of fire and got peppered pretty good. This is something that happens from time to time. You know, I've been peppered pretty well myself," said Armstrong.- Associated Press

Financial Planning 101, Part 16: Life Insurance

By Mark A. Goldman

Maybe it's time to review your life insurance program. It's easy to spend more than necessary on life insurance and end up with less coverage than you need.

Term insurance refers to policies that offer a death benefit for a limited time...sort of like car insurance. You pay a premium each year to insure against the unexpected...in this case, a premature death. Here the cost of the insurance is based on the probability of someone your age dying that year. Think of that as "pure" insurance. Since the probability that a person will die increases as they get older, the premium also goes up over time. Often, policies are designed so that enough to pay off their mortgage, get their premiums can remain level for a number kids educated, and build a nest egg for a of years before they go up. Typically these are referred to as 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, or 30 year renewable level term policies. Premiums stay level until the end of the term...then they go up. The longer the renewable period, the steeper that jump is. People who own a 20, 25, or 30 year level term policy usually don't expect to renew at the end of the term because they don't expect to need it anymore. A lot of insurance sold in the United States is sold to wealthy individuals who buy insurance for estate planning purposes. If set up properly, proceeds from a policy will be paid to beneficiaries not only income tax free, but also not subject to estate taxes. People who buy insurance for these purposes buy what is typically referred to as permanent insurance. Permanent insurance is designed to stay in force until the insured dies no matter how long he or she lives. Premiums for this kind of policy are also usually level but the premium is much higher than it rates on term insurance. So now is a good would be for term coverage. These are also sometimes referred to as cash value policies. With cash value policies the excess premium you give the company in the early years is set aside in what you might call a "savings account," the value of which will be tapped to cover the higher "pure" cost of coverage in the later years.

Most people are not wealthy enough to need insurance to offset estate taxes; so most don't have a permanent need. Most people need insurance to replace the income they will earn if they live, but will be lost if they die prematurely. With proper planning it is possible to estimate how much insurance your family will need to complete your family goals. For example, most people expect to work long secure retirement. If a person lives long enough to accomplish these things, presumably they won't need insurance after that. These folks don't need cash value insurance, they need term insurance, with the term ending somewhere around the time they expect to retire. These people probably could not afford to buy the amount of coverage they really need if they purchased cash value policies. So my point is this: you should have an appropriate amount of coverage in force and also the right kind of policy. Unless your estate will be subject to estate taxes, you probably only need term insurance. Permanent insurance is not usually a good tool for funding other financial goals. If you buy the wrong kind of coverage, chances are you will either spend too much money on life insurance and/or not really get the protection you need. Many companies recently reduced time to review.

As Stacy spoke of that moment again, I found myself so healed I had no emotional remembrance of it, only a mental image of all of us sitting around. God is good.

For years I have used the story as an example. What I learned later was that the silence represented the fact that it had happened to someone else. I never knew who until Jane's weekend.

"I owe you an apology" Stacy said, "I let you sit there and I didn't speak up." Three years ago, she decided to start to deal with the unspoken truths in her life. Now her whole message is, "Say it out loud."

I was so proud of her. It's hard work. It's worthy work. It's painful sad work. The reward is becoming who you would Losing is like fertilizer: it stinks for a while, then you get used to it.

A husband decided to wash his sweatshirt. Seconds after he stepped into the laundry room, he shouted to his wife, "What setting do I use on the washing machine?"

"It depends," she replied. "What does it say on your shirt?" He yelled back, "University of Washington."

Strange Analogies Collected by Various English Teachers:

1. The sun rose over the horizon like a great big radioactive baby's head with a bad sunburn, but then again it might just have been that Lisa was always cranky this early in the morning.

2. Jane was toast, and not the light buttery kind, nay, she was the kind that's been charred and blackened in the bottom of the toaster and has to be thrown a away because no matter how much of the burnt part you scrape off with a knife, there's always more blackened toast beneath, the kind that not even starving birds in winter will eat, that kind of toast.

3. As Fiona slowly drew the heavy velvet curtain aside, her eyes smoldered black, deep, and dark as inside the lungs of a coal miner, although it would be black in anyone's lungs if you could get in there because there wouldn't be any light, even in the pink ones of people who don't smoke.

4. From the attic came an unearthly howl. The whole scene had an eerie, surreal quality, like when you're on vacation in another city and "Jeopardy" comes on at 7 p.m. instead of 7:30.

5. Her hair glistened in the rain like nose hair after a sneeze.

Blackberry was hiding in the back and seemed a little dazed. "Huh? What happened? Where am...oh dear ... what am I?! Oh no! It doesn't come off! Help, help, Wizzy! Help!"

"Coming, Blackberry. Was that you I heard? Strange sort of poofing noise. What's this? Who are you and have you seen a bear anywhere about?"

"It's me, Wizzy! Your goofy spell worked for once. Now please undo it!"

"Oh, but Blackberry, I can't. It is you who must undo it. You must fulfill the spell and get a lady to kiss you!"

"But how and who will kiss me?"

"Someone you love with all of your heart.'

"Like Aloetta?"

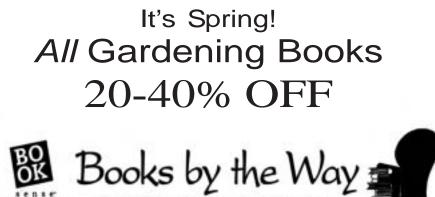

"Yes! Try her, but the kiss has to be the Kiss of Love and if you don't get married to the woman you kiss, you must be a frog forever."

"HELPPP! A, a, a, a, frog forever? Momma Mia I'm fainting! Help me!"

"Blackberry, where are you going?" "To practice my ribbots!"

Annie:

The Making of a Musical By M. L. Tuel

Photographer Hawk Jones Documenting Annie

Photographer Hawk Jones decided it was time to document the efforts of a small community to put together a major play.

"People see the finished product. They have no idea what goes into it. There are magic moments. My goal is to capture that magic, those fleeting moments when someone 'gets it,' or you can see the struggle on their faces."

"For the last couple of years, I have shot Drama Dock productions and made photos for the cast members and for promotional use. With Annie, we'll shoot all the way from first rehearsal through performances and then the cast party, with an emphasis on 'behind the scenes.' I want to show the dedication and commitment it takes to put on a show like this."

"I don't think most people have ever taken into account the enormous amount of work that goes into a musical. It's akin to childbirth! There's a degree of pain and effort, and then to see the community

What's Happening at Vashon Bookshop?

By Devon Atkins

Have you noticed? The birds are singing a different tune, and the folks at the Bookshop are, too; spring is definitely on its way! More of us are taking to the streets; so, take a leisurely stroll through Vashon this LOVE-ly month with a morning of love stories. So grab your sweetie (or, a whole family of sweeties), and gather around the big, green comfy couch for sweet tales from around Town, stop by the Bookshop, and the World. No one can tell a tale here at the Bookshop, celebrating more? Give me a call (567-4886), or email me, oyuijf@aol.com.

And, to see spring really roar, get ready for March, when the Bookshop is filled with more interesting folks — their art, ideas, beauty, and fun. It begins with the back-by-popular-demand music of Kim Thal and Rick Vanselow, Gallery Cruise Friday, March 3 at 7 p.m. BeSides is the name of their group, and they play some of the best "acoustic groove" music around, ranging from the Rolling Stones to Woodie Guthrie! And, showing his considerable talents throughout the month will be photographer Hawk Jones (see article above), the Bookshop's March artist. And, of course, there's the Poetry Salon, Thursday, March 2 at 7 p.m. (call me for the monthly emailing, 567-4886), and did I mention that March is Small Press Month at the Bookshop?

embrace the end product - well, it's like childbirth. If you've never done it, you don't know what it's like."

"You should see how these people work! Especially the little ones. They are just like troopers, and they put themselves out in every rehearsal as much as they will in performance."

"The finished product, I hope, will be a book."

"One more thing – I have a love of theater that goes back to my high school days. I've worked with a lot of directors, and Libbie is the most amazing director I've ever seen, especially with children." തതത

To begin with, if you haven't seen longtime Islander Robert Faine's amazing photos, now's the time. Faine has lived in Alaska and Japan, but what you'll see in the Bookshop are photographs from South Africa, Turkey, France, Russia, and Vietnam; Faine's definitely a world traveler, and it's pretty incredible seeing our incredible world through his eyes. And, speaking of Island treasures, you won't want to miss Miss Merna Hecht, a nationally known storyteller who just happens to make Vashon her home. It was only last fall when Merna was asked to sit in the big, red chair and read The Polar Express to a Seattle Town Hall full of pajama-d children, and we're lucky enough to have her right like Merna, so be there, Saturday morning, February 18 at 10 o'clock.

And, speaking of LOVE, don't miss my favorite event of the month, Thursday, February 23, at 7:00 p.m., WORDS, Vashon's only spoken word open mic. This month, WORDS will celebrate the joy and hazards of our favorite four-letter word, when Islanders bring original (or, not) love letters, poetry, prose, one-act plays, stories, rants and raves, right next door, at Vashon Tea Shop. Owner Susan Bassett, will put the kettle on, and folks will come out to entertain and be entertained by spouting their favorite words during this evening of impromptu performance. Signups begin at 6:30 p.m., but if you call me ahead of time, I just might sign you up on the spot. Need to know

Which only goes to prove, once again, that there's so much more at the Bookshop than just books!
